says. That philosophy is paired with a strong commitment to mentorship, as both women see investing in emerging designers as essential to the future of the profession. Allen shares, “A successful interior is not only beautiful, it just feels right.”

EVERY MEMORABLE INTERIOR begins with an understanding of how people want to live. At Romanza Interior Design, Senior Design Director Jennifer Stevens and Senior Interior Designer Melissa Allen have built their careers around creating deeply personalized luxury homes that balance beauty with functionality while guiding clients through every stage of the design and construction process. Taking a holistic approach that considers everything from architecture and lighting to furnishings and technology, the team collaborates closely with builders, architects and artisans to ensure each residence feels effortless and uniquely tailored. “Creating beautiful spaces is what we do, but caring for our clients is at the heart of how we do it,” Stevens

“What drives me is knowing that the environments we create will influence how people live, feel and connect.”

Creative Energy

For Stevens and Allen, inspiration comes from both the spark of an idea and the collaboration required to bring it to life. Allen finds the greatest excitement in developing a project’s initial vision, then watching it take shape through construction. Stevens, meanwhile, thrives on working alongside talented craftspeople and finding creative solutions throughout the process. “Nothing is more fulfilling than the final grand reveal,” Allen says, “when a client experiences their completed home for the first time and sees their vision realized in a way that often exceeds what they imagined.”

Future Vision

As the design profession continues to evolve, Allen sees tremendous opportunity for women to shape not only interiors but the entire building process. She believes today’s designers are increasingly stepping into leadership roles that extend beyond aesthetics, influencing construction, development and project management while bringing a more integrated perspective to every home. At the same time, she values the exchange of ideas between experienced professionals and emerging talent, believing both have something meaningful to contribute. She says, “The opportunity to collaborate across generations, combining the wisdom of experience with the energy and innovation of emerging talent, is something I find both inspiring and essential to the continued success of our profession.”
